GESA is heartbroken by the tragic events at Bondi Beach yesterday. This horrific act of violence has deeply shaken our community.

We extend our thoughts and sympathies to all those affected, and in particular to our Jewish colleagues and to the Jewish community. We want to confirm our support for the Jewish community, a valuable and vibrant community who make such an important contribution to medicine, and to our broader society.

In this time of profound grief, we also extend our heartfelt gratitude to our colleagues in hospitals across Sydney, who are providing care to the injured with extraordinary compassion, skill, and dedication.

We cannot believe this has happened in Australia. As we reflect on this tragedy, we reaffirm our commitment to living our values of compassion, respect, equity, and diversity. These principles guide us every day, and they are more important than ever as we stand together against violence and work toward a more inclusive and caring society.

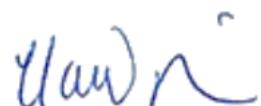

Never again.
